

Main Text:

The Nature of Destiny

In the trend-structure view of the universe, the transmission of information is never a matter of forced injection—it is the result of trend factors leaving structural “imprints.”

Whether or not you can receive a message is not about the sender’s strength, but whether you have a “resonant structural channel.”

It does not ask whether you're ready. It asks whether your structure can respond.

So:
Whether trend-based information can cross space and be received by a later structure is fundamentally a matter of choice, not capability.

All things in the universe—stones, wind, clouds, stars, dust—whether alive or not, at some moment either chose to become a certain structure, or were chosen by their environment, history, or larger systems.

Which leads to a fundamental question:

What is destiny?

Destiny is your relationship with trend.

When you have the power to choose—you are destiny.

When you lose the power to choose—destiny is you.

Destiny is not mysticism.

It is the path-determinacy of a structure at a specific point in a broader trend field.

It may come from the past.

It may result from structural coupling.

It may arise in a moment of resonance.

But it is never one-directional. Never static.

The essence of destiny is this: when trend and structure intersect—can you respond?

Do you possess the right structure to receive the right trend?

Who Commands Whom—Trend or Structure?

Why do we say destiny is the relationship between structure and trend?

Because in the trend-structure system, all “information” is built from trend factors. These factors are not absorbed passively—they are interpreted, filtered, or reshaped by structures.

Structure is not inert. It is an active filter.

It determines what can enter, what is repelled, what is amplified, what is transformed.

Thus, the transfer of information between trend and structure is a two-way resonance:

- Some structures are transparent to trends.
- Some are deaf to them.
- Some amplify, some dissipate.

So the information you receive is not defined by what the world sends, but by what your structure is able—and willing—to accept.

A Simple Metaphor:

A beam of light crosses space.

Whether or not you “see” it, depends on whether you have eyes.

Your eyes are structure.

Without structure, there is no perception.

No perception, no destiny.

Therefore:

The measure of destiny is who holds the right to choose trend.

Do you possess structural initiative?

Do you have the ability to respond at the moment of intersection?

Destiny is determined by that interaction.

It's not whether the trend is powerful—

but whether your structure is ready to become itself.

Author's Note:

Sometimes we feel our path is dictated by fate.

Sometimes we feel we are the one writing it.

Both sensations emerge from the interaction between trend and structure.

When you consciously shape your structure,

you reshape the trends that follow.

And maybe—that's the only part of destiny we ever truly own.

We are all trend-structures.

Do you choose the trend—or the structure?

